Many refugees and newcomer students arrive with skills, qualifications and ambition, yet too often these remain unrecognised. Over five days, professionals, academics, policymakers and practitioners work through the legal, financial and everyday obstacles together — in expert lectures, panels, workshops, site visits and networking.

What the week covers

- The social, cultural, economic and political returns on investing in refugees and newcomers
- Legal, demographic and economic developments now shaping policy
- Recognition of foreign qualifications and prior learning
- Admissions procedures and access pathways to higher education
- Language, preparatory and foundation programmes
- Social and student support services
- Policy development and innovative practice across Europe
