International Lifestyle Studies

Programme Summary

What will we be eating and drinking in the next decade? What will our homes be like? And how will our own looks have changed by the year 2030? What will we do in our spare time, now and in the future? Will new lifestyles influence our health? Just a few of the many trends that companies and organisations need to understand, if they want to respond to developments of their markets and to their target audiences. At ILS, you combine your knowledge on these issues with your skill to design creative and practical concepts. Your goal: to create new products and services that enhance quality of life. As graduate, you can enter the workforce as creative producer, junior market innovator, trend watcher or project leader.

MODULE WITHIN BACHELOR

Trend Forecasting

40 credits

Trend Forecasting is the process of translating information across historical, cultural, social, technological, political factors into a visual direction for the future. This project is about understanding the process of trend forecasting, by identifying key drivers and their impacts and the consumer tribes. Student will develop a visual aesthetic to reflect the trend, which you will then apply to a chosen sector/client of the fashion industry.

An Educator's Guide: Realistic and creative tools for thinking about the future

How far do we see our responses to the future being in our own hands or in the hands of others?

Students' beliefs about the future often dictate their actions, mindsets, and sense of agency in the world. This activity allows educators and students to explore how they see the future, why they see it that way, and what it might be like to adopt a ...

A group of young people are sitting on a red modular sofa in a room decorated with various posters. The posters include 'DIOR AND I', 'MONTE CARLO', 'DEUTSCH', and 'TEEUWE'. The young people are engaged in conversation, looking towards each other. The room has a modern, creative feel with a grey wall and a red carpet.

Teach the Future

Prepare young people for tomorrow by teaching the future today. It helps them embrace change in this rapidly evolving world, and show them that they are capable of proactively creating their own future and that of the world around them.
